

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE:

Attention High End Shoppers! The Extraordinary Urban Market/Houston is Sunday, November 8, 2009

Houston, Texas – July 31, 2009 - Going into its fifth year, The Urban Market/Houston, located just north of the Heights, has become the event for dealers as well as bargain hunters who are looking to spend a day in the beautiful outdoors looking through tents filled with incredible antiques and treasures right here in town. With measurements in hand, many in this crowd are on a quest as they are regulars and they know the deals you can find at this antique market.

Jackie Sharbrough has organized an amazing assembly of antique dealers for all three Urban Markets she organizes throughout the year. The dealers come from all over the country and each has their own specialty with merchandise to die for. It has the feel of a Paris flea market with the tents and big wide grassy walkways. Sunday, November 8, 2009, you can count on spending a great day looking at interesting objects, antiques, artwork, remnants and trims from workrooms, containers just in from Europe, designer left-overs, and merchandise that has to be moved to make room for new goods. And they have one day to move it all! This is very good news for shoppers.

The list of dealers, located on The Urban Market/Houston website (www.TheUrbanMarketHouston.com), features a great collection not to disappoint. Some dealers have shopped throughout Europe for years, with booths filled with over the top finds and antique home and garden items perfect for any abode. Above all, there is fun to be had shopping and visiting with friends and great treasures to be found at unbelievable deals. Foodies will enjoy a terrific variety and selection of sandwiches, salads, oven fresh breads, sweets, Katz's iced coffee, and Pimento Cheese Spread. The Urban Market/Houston has become an all day event with "early birds" lined up looking for the booth number of their favorite dealers. The gate is $5 - children are free.
